

April 21, 2025

A Texan's traditional spring bluebonnet picture. I hadn't taken one in years.

Dear friends and supporters,

Thank you all so very much for hanging in there with me through the years—first as I taught missionary kids in Bulgaria, and now as I serve in the IT department for SIL in Dallas. This is a role essential to Bible translation work. I am so incredibly grateful for your prayers, encouragement, and generous financial support.

There have been two big changes in my life recently.

Firstly, I have joined Tyndale Bible Translators, and am now working for both them and SIL.

When I first joined SIL, the plan was for me to be in a paid position for one year, after which I would begin raising support as a missionary. Due to how SIL was initially formed as a support organization for other missions, it does not handle support raising directly. Members must join another organization to raise support, even if most of our work is still with SIL.

That's where Tyndale Bible Translators stepped in. They are willing to be the organization through which I raise support. Tyndale has invited me to visit Papua New Guinea this October for a vision trip—an opportunity for me to better understand what life and ministry look like for the people I'm serving remotely, and to explore whether it might be a good long-term fit for me to serve there in person. I am currently raising funds with that trip in mind.

If you'd like to contribute financially, you can do so at:

<https://tyndalebibletranslators.org/missionaries/stephen-cahill/>

The second big change is that—after nearly ten months—I've moved out of Mom's house. I'm now living just across the street from my workplace, sharing a house with two other guys around my age. One of them is a close friend, and I'm already connecting well with the other. It's only been a few days, but I can tell we're going to be a good fit living together. It has been a little hard on Mom to see me move out again, but she agrees that this is a positive step (which she was hoping for!).

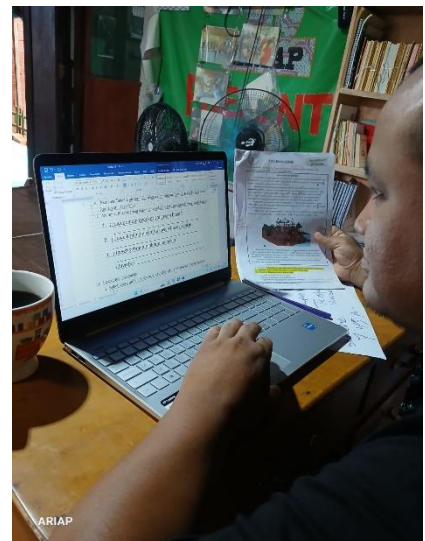

From now on, I'll be sending updates from my new Tyndale email address: Stephen.C@TyndaleBT.org

If you'd like to keep receiving email updates, just drop me a quick note at that address.

Thank you again for walking this journey with me. Your encouragement and support mean more than I can say. Wishing you a joyful and hope-filled Easter!

Yours in Christ,
Stephen Cahill

(469) 233-5108
6665 Nyman Drive
Duncanville, TX 75236

A worker in Peru using a laptop that I refurbished and donated to his project.